) that contains the complete driver code for your new card. The first thing you should do is burn the new.exe file to a CD. (You will need a CD-RW, -R, or -RW drive, and it must be blank). You must burn the files to the CD (NOT copy them to your hard drive), otherwise, you will not be able to access them when you boot your computer. If you have an SCSI or RAID controller, or other non-generic hardware, please contact the appropriate manufacturer for the latest version of the driver. After you have burned the new driver.exe file to a CD, you must then run the program and select "Install". You will need to answer the question that the installer asks, and will then be asked if you would like the card to be set as the primary or secondary audio device. If you have an AGP card, please note that the driver has been written to support an AGP chipset only. For AGP cards please choose "Primary Audio" and for PCI cards, choose "Secondary Audio". On the very first screen that the program will show you, there will be an "Installation/Uninstallation" button. Click the button and follow the instructions that the program gives you. Click "Finish", and then click OK. You should be able to now start playing your music. If this does not work, then you should look into the different options that your motherboard gives you for "Advanced BIOS Settings" as described in the "3.1.2.1 BIOS Settings" section. It is important to remember to save your BIOS settings whenever you make changes in your BIOS. This will prevent the computer from being "stuck" in an "Unbootable" state. Again, for AGP cards only, please note that the driver is written for a 32-bit operating system only. The next version of the driver will be written for a 64-bit operating system. FAQ Q: My computer does not boot into the "Desktop" or any "Windows". If this is the case, you may not have the proper motherboard drivers installed in your computer. See "2.1.3.1 Windows Setup" for the required steps to install these drivers 82157476af
